The Riverwood Bedroom Collection is more than a statement of design and furniture excellence, it is a timber story.

This Riverwood Furniture has been manufactured from timber milled from logs salvaged from Rivers and Lake Beds where they have lain hidden for many many years.

The largest resource of this unique New Zealand timber is from areas where these waterways were used for transporting logs from the Native Forest to the mill. Places like the West Coast of the South Island, Lake Brunner near Greymouth, and The Northern Wairoa River were used for many years around the turn of the century for transporting logs to the timber mills. Unpredictable weather patterns, natural obstacles and “sinkers” or extra heavy logs meant that many logs never completed the journey, but sank beneath the surface where they have lain undisturbed until today.

Now many years later, these logs are being recovered with the help of boats, divers, winches, and diggers. This salvage timber or ‘Riverwood’ consists primarily of Rimu and Matai timber that has largely been preserved intact and displays unique characteristics caused by its long term submersion under the surface. Shades of slate, chocolate and sepia are fused into the grain giving a depth and character unique to Riverwood.

Time-tested constructional details such as dovetailed drawers and doweled joints underlie the quality of this suite. Whisper quiet ball-bearing runners and polished drawers feature throughout.

Complementing the environmentally sensitive character of the Riverwood Collection is a unique finishing system. This comprises of a specially developed, five stage coating system, applied with care to enhance the beautiful grains and colours of this distinctive New Zealand Timber. The resultant smooth, tactile finish gives a lovely glow to the timber, and this can be maintained by occasional application of Riverwood Sprayable Wax. The Riverwood Collection is a special combination of Heritage Timber, traditional craftsmanship and a unique finishing process.
